The Baccarat Scandal.

By Cable and Associated Press.

LONDON, June 5.—In this the fifth day of the trial of the famous baccarat scandal suit there is a repetition of the scenes witnessed during the previous days. The cross-examination of Mrs. Lyett Green was resumed. Edward Clarke had the young lady go again all over the grounds he covered yesterday. After some further questions, Mrs. Arthur Wilson, mother of Arthur Stanley Wilson, was called to the stand.

Mrs. Wilson, when asked by Sir Charles Russell as to whether she had seen Cumming cheat, replied with great emotion: "Yes, unfortunately; there is no doubt about it."

Mrs. Arthur Wilson says she was present at Tranby Croft in the room where baccarat was being played on September 8th. She distinctly recalled her son Arthur looking at her with a puzzled expression on his face, and that he afterwards made a horrible communication to her. It was to the effect that he had been playing Cumming cheat while playing cards.

The witness then repeated in detail evidence which had already been given as to the manner in which the Baronet cheated. Mrs. Wilson was most emphatic in her declarations that there had been an agreement entered into by the Wilson family to watch plaintiff on the second night (September 9th) of the baccarat playing.

Continuing, Mrs. Wilson said when her son told her plaintiff had been cheating, she said: "Oh, you must not speak of it. We must not have scandal in our house."

During the second evening's play witness did not notice anything until she received a note from her son-in-law, Lyett Green, informing her of facts discovered. Mrs. Wilson added that she recollected plaintiff asking to have an extra £10 paid him for a £10 counter, which he claimed had not been noticed by the Prince of Wales, and that the Prince in the annoyance told the plaintiff to place his stakes where they could be seen.

Referring to another occasion, Mrs. Wilson said she saw plaintiff push an extra £10 counter over the line. Mrs. Wilson then said she had an interview with the Prince of Wales on the subject the following day and that she expressed fears that her son, Arthur Stanley Wilson, would suffer from the after effects of what had occurred, owing to the fact that he was the first person to notice and call attention to the Baronet's cheating, but she said the Prince told her there was no need for her to fear anything of the kind. From September 10th, until legal proceedings were commenced, Mrs. Wilson continued, she said absolutely nothing to anybody outside of those of her own family who were already acquainted with the facts regarding the scandal. Mrs. Wilson was then turned over to Sir Edward Clarke for cross-examination, and in reply to the Solicitor-General's questions, said she had not signed a paper pledging herself to secrecy, but Mrs. Wilson admitted the Prince of Wales had asked her not to say anything about the affair.

Answering other questions put to her by the leading counsel for plaintiff, Mrs. Wilson said that on the night of September 8 the Prince of Wales asked her if it was not possible to provide a proper baccarat table for the night following. This Mrs. Wilson explained was before the Prince knew anything of the alleged cheating on the part of Cumming. Consequently for the second night's play a fresh table was provided; but this was not done on account of Cumming, though it was hoped that its use would prevent the occurrence of the events of the previous night. Witness' husband, Arthur Wilson, Sr., she continued, objected to baccarat playing because in his opinion the play might become high among hot-headed boys. [Laughter.] On the previous occasion, she continued, the sum of £500 had got into the bank, which her husband thought was too large. "Why did not you tell the Prince of Wales your husband objected to baccarat?" asked Clarke.

"Because," replied Mrs. Wilson, "we were such a staid, non-gambling party that we didn't think there could be much harm resulting from a few quiet games at baccarat."

Mrs. Wilson, at another stage of her cross-examination, said £15 was the highest stake which she saw played on the table during the two evenings and she didn't think anybody staked that amount until her husband did so during the second night's play.

Lord Coventry followed Mrs. Arthur Wilson into the witness box. His testimony covered that gone over by other witnesses. Coventry said General Williams and he told plaintiff, after the accusations of cheating had been made, that Lyett Green and one of the gentlemen who had witnessed the acts complained of, announced a desire to be confronted with Sir William. "But," added the witness slowly, "plaintiff did not express any desire to meet Mr. Green or to be confronted with his accusers."

Early produced a note book in which he had entered a memorandum of the principal events which took place at Tranby Croft September last. Sir Charles Russell read the entries referring to the baccarat scandal, which had been made there by Coventry. It was soon seen that the account in the book agreed in all the main particulars with the evidence already presented on behalf of defendants. The memorandum closed with the words: "I was induced to recommend this course in order to avoid a scandal and in order to keep the Prince of Wales out of it. I considered I had done my duty to society so far as the case permitted, by insisting that the accused shall never play cards again." This concluded the case for the defense and Sir Charles Russell, on behalf of the defense, addressed the jury. At the conclusion of the address the court adjourned to Monday next.

Methodists Score the Prince.

By Cable and Associated Press.

CARDIFF, June 5.—The Methodists of South Wales have adopted a resolution expressing regret at learning the Prince of Wales took a part at Baccarat at Tranby Croft. It adds: "We respectfully submit his royal highness that by his conduct he offends the religious sense of the people and draws the Royal House from the high position in which it stood and tends to lessen the loving and devoted affection to the throne, which has ever been cherished by us."

World's Fair Matters.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—It is agreed that the government would defray the actual traveling expenses of agents to be selected by Director-General Davis for duty in connection with the admission of foreign exhibits to the World's Fair.

Colonel Davis received a telegram this morning notifying him of the death of his mother at Boston. He arranged to leave for there immediately.

News Not Credited.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The account which came from San Francisco yesterday of the naval engagement in Valparaiso harbor, was received with incredulity at the Navy Department. Such facts as are officially known seem to discredit the story. The engagement is reported to have taken place on April 28th in the presence of foreign men-of-war. Admiral McCann was there on that date on board the Baltimore; yet, in his report to the Department the next day he failed to mention any such event. In addition to this, the Department officers say they have no doubt if an engagement with such pronounced results had taken place the news would have been promptly telegraphed to the United States instead of taking the slower course of the mail steamer.

Massachusetts' New Bishop.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 5.—Twenty-eight dioceses out of 52 have voted for the consecration of Phillips Brooks as Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts. As soon as the Massachusetts diocese receives it a formal notice from the necessary number of the standing committee through its officers will communicate with Bishop Williams, presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States, and he will ask 74 Bishops to say yes or no to the question of Brooks' consecration. He ought to get an answer within two weeks. Dr. Brooks friends think now that by the middle of this month it will be definitely known whether or not Dr. Brooks is to be the Bishop of Massachusetts.

Presbyterians.

By Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, June 5.—This morning's session of the Reformed Presbyterian synod was devoted to the explanation of Dr. George's defence of the action of the Pittsburgh Presbytery in suspending seven ministers for heresy. He declared the action was brought about by the untrammelled and individual act of each man, and that their action was "not dictated by any one man. The sympathy of on-lookers seems to be with the suspended minister."

Sir John.

By Cable and Associated Press.

OTTAWA, June 5.—There is no change to report in the condition of Sir John McDonald.

News from Earnscliffe to-day is not encouraging. The Premier still retains consciousness but his heart action is becoming more enfeebled.

Dr. George Ross arrived from Montreal this afternoon. He is a specialist in heart troubles and has been summoned from Ottawa at the request of the patients family.

Census on Coal.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The census bureau bulletin, on the subject of bituminous coal production in Pennsylvania, shows the output was 36,174,089 short tons in 1889, nearly double that reported by the tenth census. The total value of the output is given as $27,953,215.

Judgment Against Dorsey.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 5.—James Corrigan, a member of the banking firm of Dolbear, Hussey & Co. of Cleveland, has obtained judgment against Stephen W. Dorsey for $24,466 on drafts dated August 19th, 1887.

School Census.

Special to the GAZETTE.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 5.—The school census marshal has about completed his report. This year there is a gain of 1,312 children over last year, there now being enrolled 62,456. This is a larger increase in any one year than has been noted for a long period. There are 934 Chinese children, as against 907 last year, and 248 negroes as against 243 last year. The gain in white boys and girls is 1,281. There are 24,037 children under five years of age. This added to the children of school age gives a total of 86,493. There are 38,145 children attending the public schools.

German Warships in San Francisco.

Special to the GAZETTE.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 5.—The German fleet of three corvettes, the Leipzig, Sophie and Alexandrina, under command of Admiral Vals, which left Yokohama for this port May 3 arrived this morning. A TODDY BLOSSOM.

Whisky Will Tell If It Is Taken Long Enough.

The toddy blossom on the nose has been for years an inflection to the amateur inebriate. Usually he is interested as to the philosophy of the symptom. It is very simple. The skin that covers the nose is very full of little blood vessels, highly vascular, as we say. Alcohol weakens the nerves, which control the circulation of the blood. Thus an accumulation of blood at the end of the nasal organ closes up the mouth of one of the little sweat glands which are found all over the body. So the perspiration fails to escape from the pore that is ordinarily open; it forms a clot, and nature seeks to remove the clot by inflammation. That makes a toddy blossom. Long continued indulgence in an excess of alcohol occasions a general clotting of the sweat glands, which results in a swelling of the nose, so that a man's proboscis may eventually assume the appearance of a sweetbread, through fatty enlargement of the degenerated tissue. This is the final stage.

THE CAPITOL DOME.

It Weighs More Than Four Thousand Tons.

The Capitol dome at Washington is the only considerable dome of iron in the world. It is a vast hollow sphere, weighing 8,000,300 pounds. How much is that? More than 4,000 tons, or almost the weight of 17,000 full-grown persons, or about equal to 1,000 laden coal cars of four tons each, which, if strung out one behind the other, would occupy a mile and a half of track. On the very top of the dome the allegorical figure "America," weighing 13,985 pounds, lifts its proud head high in the air. The pressure of this dome and figure upon the piers and pillars is 14,477 pounds to the square foot. It would, however, require a pressure of 755,238 pounds to the square foot to crush the supports of the dome. The cost of this immense dome was a little short of $1,000,000.

Surprise Valley Without a Market.

Surprise Valley is full of grain—last year's crop—and no sale for the product. If the farmers of that locality would go to raising hogs and putting the grain in good ham and bacon, they would have a salable article that it would pay to transport to market. Large bodies move slowly, but if the N.-C. ever wakes up to the importance of the northern country and pushes its road as far as Alturas, the farmers will have an outlet for their produce and the railroad company will do four times the business they do now. As it is, the terminus is only an aggravation to our northern neighbors. It just runs far enough to shut out teams and completely block the trade from the whole northern country so far as Reno is concerned.

THE COINAGE OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The Question Ably Handled by a Gentleman Who Has Given It Much Thought.

The following communication was written and handed the GAZETTE for publication. The author has given the money question much thought and presents his case well. Owing to its length, it has been divided and sections of his argument will be presented from day to day until it has all been published:

EDITOR GAZETTE: The Fifty-first Congress has adjourned, and the coinage of gold and silver bullion remains in nearly the same status as when the Fifty-first Congress adjourned. In truth, it may be asserted that silver bullion, instead of having the same legal status, has been relegated practically to the condition of a commodity.

During the interval between the 4th of March last and the 1st Monday in December, next, the question whether unlimited coinage of both gold and silver bullion into lawful money for the purpose of facilitating commercial exchanges is in order before the tribunal of last resort—the American people. During this interval, no legislation affecting financial matters can be had, it is proper that the people, through the medium of the press, should have fair and candid arguments presented in favor of or against unlimited coinage of both gold and silver bullion, the metals which the commerce of all civilized nations has selected as the medium of exchange. The administration has steadily opposed unlimited coinage of silver bullion on any terms, and in this position it has been strongly backed by moneyed institutions of the great financial centers of the nation.

Even representatives of constituencies whose interests will apparently be benefited by an increase in a circulating medium possessing an intrinsic value in itself, have also opposed unlimited coinage of silver bullion into lawful money. An analysis of the opposition, however, discloses this fact named. The friends of unlimited coinage of silver into money (barring the usual exceptions to all general rules) are the representatives of the debtor class, while the opponents, with few exceptions, are the representatives of the creditor class. In short, during the agitation, the creditor interest seemed to crystallize into opposition, while the debtor interest, which seems to be largely in the majority, appears to be in favor of the larger liberty in the coinage of both gold and silver into lawful money on the present relative basis as to weight and fineness. During the period of political quiet, why not by fair and non-partisan discussion of a non-partisan subject, endeavor to bring creditor and debtor together on a common platform through the medium of public discussions.

During the last few years every business firm or corporation has felt severely the financial pressure which has been lately increasing in weight. The inability of the debtor class to meet the requirements of the creditor class has carried many concerns to the wall, whose assets, with extended credit, were ample to meet all their liabilities. But for lack of a circulating medium equal to the demands of the business of the nation, the creditor class lost confidence, which means to the debtor class shortened credits at increased rates of interest. A long continuance of these conditions sooner or later "dissolves" the margin between solvency and insolvency. These concatenating conditions were not brought about by any management of the debtor class generally, but by gradual and long-continued contraction of the legal currency of the nation.

In this condition of financial uncertainty the debtor class found itself deprived of the means to pay. Seeing then that the rapid extinction of the national debt by the payment of its bonds, which constituted the basis of the circulation of the national banks, was rapidly impairing the ability of the banks to supply the demands of the business of the country, some method must be adopted by which this want can be met. Until 1873 silver coin by statutory enactment and the stamp of the government was the equal relative of gold coin bearing the same stamp, neither of which was legal tender without said stamp. Those who felt the pressure of shortened credits and increased rates of interest believed, not without reason, an unlimited silver coinage would afford relief to the class requiring it. This belief became so strongly focused on the public mind that its crystallization into law seemed almost a foregone conclusion, and it has severely taxed two administrations to prevent its becoming the supreme law of the land.

Moreover, unless there is a radical change in public sentiment, the next Congress will provide for unlimited coinage of both gold and silver on payment of seigniorage covering the cost of refining and coining of each metal. Why should not the money which could purchase Louisiana, Florida, Texas, California, Nevada, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona be good enough to purchase provisions, bonds and lands, and be used as a basis of a uniform paper currency? What made the money with which these territories were purchased a legal tender in exchange for them? Was the statute and stamp of the nation from which they were purchased or the statute or stamp of the purchasing nation. The purchase of Spanish territory was made with "Spanish milled silver dollars," or their equivalent in golden doubloons. The same system of payment to France and Mexico prevailed for the territories acquired from those nations. We did not tender American gold and silver coin on payment except as bullion measured by the gold and silver standard of those countries. There was a credit balance against us and we settled it with gold and silver coin at the bullion value in the nation of the creditor. Balances between nations or individuals of different nations are usually settled with legal currency or its equivalent, of the creditor nation. Domestic balances can always be settled with the legal currency of the nation in which the debtor and creditor reside.

The legally authorized stamp of the government on its currency, whether of gold, silver or bills of credit, is the only method yet devised for settling balances among citizens of the same country, and for facilitating trade and commerce generally. The larger volume of this currency, based upon intrinsic value, the more prosperous the industrial pursuits of the people.

But financial theorists tell us that if unlimited coinage of silver be permitted on the present basis of sixteen grains of standard silver to one of standard gold, "the latter will leave the country, and that silver will become the single standard of value." Statistics seem to antagonize these assertions. All commercial transactions are subjects of contract either implied or specific, whether national or international. If between citizens of the same nation, the coins bearing the stamp of fineness, weight and value of the government, is the basis of settlement of all balances in commercial transactions, unless there be a special contract, the requirements of which or otherwise. If the transactions are international under similar conditions, the coin or legal currency of the nation of the creditor is the basis of settlement between the creditor and debtor. If an invoice be for English goods the payment will be in money which is legal tender in England. If paid for in American coin, whether gold or silver, or both, they are taken at their bullion value only. In other words, they are exchanged in payment as a commodity, and not as lawful money of England. As bullion, it goes to the English mint, is melted and minted into coin of the realm, and then and only then does it become a legal tender in settlement of balance. The same rule operates in this country. English gold and silver coins imported into this country are received as bullion, are recoined into American money of standard weight and fineness, then it becomes legal tender for both public and private dues as prescribed by law.

BEATING RAILROAD TIME.

Lively Stage Trip From Virginia City to Sacramento.

"Did you ever hear of the stage trip from Virginia City to Sacramento that beat the best time the railroads made after they were constructed?" It was General William M. Lent who addressed a party of Californians sitting in an office on lower Broadway, New York, killing time, as it were. Some had and some hadn't, and so the old-time mine and real estate operator went on. "I was called suddenly to San Francisco on some important business. The regular stage started at 4 o'clock in the afternoon to catch the Sacramento boat at 2 o'clock the next afternoon. I went to the stage company and wanted a special. All right. They would start her out at 12 o'clock that night and land us in Sacramento on time. I invited Seth Cook and Johnny Skae to make the trip with me. I took the front seat. Skae the middle and Seth had all the luxuries of the hind one. The driver was tied on to his seat, and two stable helpers were told to hold on as best they could.

What a wild drive that was, especially the night part! How the stage thumped and lurched, and how we tossed and tumbled! Down the grade we went in a cloud of dust, through the valley at a colossal speed, and then up and down the Sierra grades. At every twelve miles we changed horses and stretched while the operation was performed. But we were on time, and like Sheridan, we were getting nearer our goal every hour. At Strawberry we loaded up the boot with cord-wood and a sack of flour, and then up and down the Sierra grades. At every twelve miles we changed horses and stretched while the operation was performed. But we were on time, and like Sheridan, we were getting nearer our goal every hour. At Strawberry we loaded up the boot with cord-wood and a sack of flour, and then up and down the Sierra grades. SPORT OF THE ESKIMO. The Men Like to Gamble, Wrestle, Tell Stories, Sing and Dance.

Next to gambling the Eskimo men like to wrestle. The usual way of doing this is a test rather of strength than skill. The wrestlers sit down on the floor, or in any convenient place, side by side, and facing in opposite directions, say, with their right elbows touching. Then they look arms, and each strives to straighten out the other's arms. As the match is usually made bare-armed they not infrequently pull up the skin in the struggle. In the old days when a stranger arrived at a settlement he was invited to wrestle in some way with a villager, and the winner was allowed to kill the loser if he chose to do so.

If less exciting, story-telling is really almost as common for an evening's diversion as gambling, says a writer in the New York Sun. The Eskimo traditions are told over and over again. Everyone knows them word for word, and should the relater omit or add a single syllable he would be corrected instantly by some one of the audience. There is nothing like these recitals in America, except in the work, so called, of certain secret societies, where precisely the same sort of repetition is ex- ecuted. The relater of the story sits at one side of the room, and, covering his head, turns his face toward the wall away from the audience before he be- gins. There is no applause during the recital nor when he is finished. There are traditions that relate to the early Norse settlers of Greenland, to the origin of the seal and other valuable animals; to the red Indians of North America, beside many stories of love and valor that seem to have no great value to ethnologists, though very in- teresting as specimens of what may be called the literature of peculiar people.

The native songs can scarcely be called musical, though the Eskimo voice is naturally sweet and fine. The native tunes are monotonous chants, but the Eskimo readily learns the tunes of the whites. In an Arak village were two good violins, three or four con- certinas, and some French harmonicas, most of them out of order, but the skill of the owners of those that were in order was equal to that of the best mu- sicians to be found at rural dances in Yankee land.

The Eskimos like the reels better than any other forms of dances, and all, old and young, dance with zest and aban- don that is inspiring to the spectator. Under the Danish Lutheran teaching this form of amusement has been in no wise discouraged, but the Moravians believed dancing a sin and held up the terrors of hell before the unfortunate merry-makers. Some have believed the Moravian story, and to the depressing influences by which they are surround- ed add fear of future torment as a re- ward for wishing to join the sports of their light-hearted neighbors. Many, indeed, forsake the Moravian teachers, but are then forever haunted by the fear that the doctrine of a vengeful God may be true after all.

Men and boys play ball, and the two games most popular, if combined, would not vary greatly from Yankee football. The ball is made of stout seal leather, filled sometimes with sand and clay and sometimes with moss. It is sewed up with seal sinews, and is sometimes ornamented with tufts or tassels and a zone made of strings of seal leather with the hair on. The players divide into two parties always "chosen" up, as Yankee boys would say. Then in one game one side tosses the ball about, while the other tries to capture it; in the other one side tries to kick the ball over a wide space to a goal, while the other tries to capture and hit the goal with it instead. Sometimes they bat it in the latter game instead of kicking it.

Over on the west side of Baffin's bay the Eskimos have in winter a house in every village set aside for feasts and dances. It is dome-shaped and about twenty feet in diameter by fifteen high. Here the entire populace gathers. The married women stand in a row next to the wall, the unmarried women stand next to them, while the men form a third ring inside of the rest. The chil- dren, or all who are under twelve years, form two groups near the en- trance. Then the feast begins, and boiled meat and soup, with raw seal liver, are passed around as long as any one can eat. This done, a man strips to the waist, takes a drum made some- thing like a tennis bat covered with raw seal skin, and stepping into the center of the ring begins to sing, and dance, and beat the drum. The words of the song are improvised by the singer and are usually satirical. He praises first one and then another of the com- pany for good qualities that are notice- ably lacking, to the great delight of all the rest, though they know that they will be scored if they have not already been. The dancing is simply a stamp- ing of the feet and a swaying of the body—the motion is ridiculous to any one not an Eskimo. The women join in the chorus, but the men listen in silence.

The Latest Bow.
Of late there is noticeable in ultra- fashionable circles a revival of the somewhat archaic courtesy with which the perst of misses a century ago were wont to acknowledge compliments or betoken recognition. In place, how- ever, of the ungainly sinking of the shoulders of the knee custom is gra- ciously disposed to insist upon the more courtly French obeisance, consisting of a profound inclination of the head, com- bined with a low and stately dip. It was said of Talleyrand that one bow from him was worth an empire, so ele- gant were his gestures and so per- fect his self-control. The French bow, when rightly achieved, is a poem in mo- tion, a symphony in courtly grace.

An Indian Myth.
It is stated in the mythology of India that an immense spider was the origin of the universe and the first cause of all things. Drawing the material from its own bowels it wove the web of creation. Sitting in the center of its work it feels and directs the motion of every part, until at length, when it has pleased itself sufficiently in ordering and con- templating its perfection, it will draw all the threads it has spun out again into itself and, when they have been ab- sorbed, everything will have vanished into nothing.

OUR FAILING EYES. Blindness on the Increase—Precautions That Should Be Used.

The latest statistics show that blind- ness is on the increase in the United States, says Dr. Gruening in the Epoch. This increase in New York state is at- tributable to the failure of carrying out the law which requires midwives to re- port to the boards of health all cases of hemorrhoids in a dead letter, which is a great pity, because in the asylums for the blind there are more people who have become blind from having been neglected than from any other cause. This purulent inflamma- tion of the infant's eyes, which is so often neglected by the poor, is bad for everybody in the house, owing to its decidedly infectious character.

Children should not be admitted to schools if they have any contagious disease of the eye, to detect which re- quires expert examination, for it can- not always be seen; for example, gran- ulous lids contain an infectious source. Just as children in the public schools are required to show a certifi- cate of vaccination before they can gain admission, so should children likewise be required to prove that the condition of their eyes is not such as to endanger the eyes of their little comrades. I have already examined a whole school, and some children have been discharged on my recommenda- tion and obliged to absent themselves until cured.

Most persons are born far-sighted; some remain so throughout life; the sight of others becomes normal, and still others become near-sighted. Americans as a class are not so near- sighted as people of older civilizations. The Germans are the most near-sighted people, probably because they study the most and with the poorest light; there are at best very few normal eyes; we are all of us generally either near-sighted or far-sighted. Color- blindness is at times congenital, in which case it is incurable; but color- blindness may be acquired later in life, and then it yields to treatment. Sta- tistics show that about 4 per cent. of all men are color-blind, but only 2 per cent. of all women. Too great care can- not be exercised in the marine service and in the railroad service not to em- ploy the color-blind from red causes them to, and the danger signal with the safe signal, to the great danger of the traveling public.

"August Flower"

Dyspepsia. There is a gentle- man at Malden-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., named Captain A. G. Pareis, who has written us a letter in which it is evident that he has made up his mind concerning some things, and this is what he says:

"I have used your preparation called August Flower in my family for seven or eight years. It is con- stantly in my house, and we consider it the best remedy for Indigestion, and Constipation we have ever used or known. My wife is troubled with Dyspepsia, and at times suffers very much after eating. The August Flower, however, re- lieves the difficulty. My wife fre- quently says to me when I am going to town, 'We are out of Constipation of August Flower, and I think you had better get another bottle.' I am also troubled with Indigestion, and when- ever I am, I take one or two tea- spoonfuls before eating, for a day or two, and all trouble is removed."
